If you happened to have stumbled upon my blog, allow me to introduce myself. My name is Tony Odarg. I am a young Catholic single man with very few friends; I reside in the United States. I decided a while ago to start analyzing politics and religion. I found so much of the political and social commentary that is available online is wanting, typically from perspectives that have been either discredited or that are less than advantageous. My goal is to offer some different understandings in the age of universal apostasy and leftist propaganda. I reject the modern world, mainstream history and the Vatican structures. The religion that inhabits those once Catholic walls is modernism, aptly described by Pope Pius X as the synthesis of all heresies. However, unlike so many thinkers, I also reject those who promulgate such evil as legitimate Catholic authorities. They are imposters, antipopes and sinister phonies the lot of them. They deserve to be decried and resisted to their faces. Moreover, the source of all of this apostasy is the Second Vatican Council; therefore, I reject it as such. The political dynamic of right versus left, conservative versus liberal is false and I reject secularism, liberalism, socialism, capitalism and democracy as products of the Enlightenment, the true dark ages of mankind.

There is very little you will find on this blog and in my work that you will agree with. This is most likely due to the constant brainwashing of the West that has taken place for generations. Everything from diversity to equality, from the sexual revolution to LGBTQ safe spaces, from civil rights to interracial marriage and on and on and on. You have been lied to. I will try to prove how, in my own perhaps mediocre way. I claim no authority nor am I of great intellect; I have not been paid by anyone nor do I say things for attention. All I ask is that you challenge your assumptions, and I will offer you evidence that you have been fed a steady diet of straight up cow dung.

What I am not

I am not a conspiracy theorist, if that means believing in things without evidence. I am not an anonymous troll (I use a pseudonym, like many serious authors in the past), everything I say I try to offer some documentation for. Do not trust me, go look it up. I have my opinions, but I am primarily interested in the truth. I believe the truth is objective, can be known and is important.

How to Use my Blog

There are two categories you will see upon entering the site: “podcast archive” and “blog articles”. The podcast archive is a listing of all the podcasts I have ever done, with links to where to listen and download, along with sources used and a description of the topic in question. Second is the blog articles tab. These are articles I have written about various topics. They may or may not have an accompanying podcast, and such will be specified in the article. I try to release several short podcasts daily, along with one article per week. For more ways to follow me, please click on the links below to my other platforms. This post will be updated regularly. Currently this site is under construction: I have over thirteen-hundred podcasts! I am attempting at the moment to back them all up to my blog. This will take place over a year’s time, more than likely. Once that is completed, the newly released podcasts will be at the top of the “podcast archive” tab when you click on it. Until then, the best way to be notified of up-to-date podcasts is to follow me on Bitchute, Twitter, Gab or YouTube.

Thank you for checking out my work.

God Bless

Tony Odarg.
